*课程简介 (Description)	(英文 300-500 字) This course introduces undergraduate students of law to the field of private international law. The main contents of this course includes an introduction to the three basic topics of private international law, i.e. jurisdiction, choice of law, and the effects of foreign judgments. Students are taught the basic technical moves on those three topics to make them aware of the practical relevance of the field in an interconnected global economy and to provide them with the necessary tools to solve cases arising in such context. The course approaches the field from a comparative perspective that includes Chinese law, European law, and English law. Besides standard lectures that provide the basic information, students are also trained carefully in a set of problem questions to apply what they have learned to specific fact situations.
